This is a model made from wood. It shows bread being kneaded and baked. Models like this one were placed inside tombs so that bread making could continue in the afterlife. In Ancient Egypt everyone ate bread. The dough was often mixed with honey, fruit or herbs then cooked on the outside of ovens.

When it was cooked, the dough stopped being sticky and the loaves fell off the sides.

This beautiful glass fish is a bottle. It probably contained perfumed oil. Egyptians rubbed oil all over themselves to stop their skin cracking in the sun and to make themselves smell nice.
